A few months into a new budget year, Bonita Springs has one piece of good news: impact fee collections are coming in more quickly than expected.

City Finance Director Lisa Griggs Roberson said impact fee collections totaled about $986,000 in the first quarter -- about 61 percent of what the city was expecting to collect this year.

There's no indication that will continue for the rest of the year, though.

State revenue continues to come in at lower levels than expected.
